The Daily Press

HONGKONG, JANUARY 16th, 1871.

The ideas given forth by Dr. TWEED in his pamphlet regarding the powers of the Central Government and forming the basis of the policy advocated by him, to which allusion has been made, appear to result partly from his taking only a limited view of the objects of foreign policy in China, and partly from a misconception with regard to the powers of the Central Government. Although the protection of their subjects resident in China is an indispensable object to be sought by any line of policy decided upon by foreign powers, this object is not by any means the only one that has to be secured. It is impossible to ignore the importance of maintaining relations with the Central Government, as it is only by so doing that a check can be put upon the encroachments of Russia in the North of China. Once let the relations between Peking and foreign Governments cease, and the North of China must become the prey of Russia. This consideration mainly influenced Sir FREDERICK BARON in advocating the centralization policy, and none of his successors have ever thought it would be advisable to depart from the principles which he laid down. At the same time, it is undeniable that the Peking Government does not afford that protection which foreign nations have a right to look for from it; and it is not unusual the idea should arise that better protection would be obtained by establishing direct relations with the various Viceroy and local officials. This would probably be the case, if securing protection and trade were the only objects sought in shaping our policy; but though the lack of adding in keeping China together is one of our difficulties, and one of a somewhat thankless nature, it cannot be denied that the end in view is of enormous importance to all foreign nations, and more especially to Great Britain. If Russia were ever permitted to establish herself in China, she would undoubtedly follow a protective system of trade, and a most serious blow would be struck at the commercial interests of other nations. This is a contingency which cannot be risked; and as a withdrawal of relations with the Central Government would tend greatly to this result, one of the chief objects of our policy must be to endeavour if possible to maintain the integrity of the Chinese Empire.

Accepting this, however, as a necessity, there is still no need for us to submit to outrage and insult in parts of the country distant from the capital. Strangely enough we are indebted to Russia for information as to the right way to maintain our position in China, and secure respect and protection from the Provincial and local authorities. At the time when the China question was occupying the attention of Europe after the last war, the Northern Bazaar, a semi-official Russian paper, enunciated the principle that the security of foreigners in China would be better attained by foreign Governments letting it be known that any insult offered to their subjects would be promptly and severely punished, than by any treaties or any appeals to the central authorities. This has proved to be perfectly true, and in advocating a similar line of conduct as a means of attaining security, Dr. TWEED does not go far wrong, though he underestimates the power of the Viceroy as entirely independent in their respective districts. But he overlooks what Sir FREDERICK BARON did not overlook, though possibly Russia hoped he would do so, that the price of security so obtained would be leaving China open to be annexed by that country. It can be obtained in any other way, and this bearing of the question, as shown by his published despatches, was well appreciated by Sir FREDERICK BARON, who rightly considered that before accepting such dangerous counsels it would be well to see what could be done by establishing friendly relations with the Central Government, and if possible so strengthening it as to enable it to cope with refractory officials at a distance. For a time this policy seemed to work well. For five or six years after the last war with China was at end, foreigners were more respected and were safer in China than they had been before; and this security was attributed to the successful working of the centralization policy which Sir FREDERICK BARON inaugurated. But the truth was the security was caused by the centralization policy, but by the fear inspired by the war. The last troops stationed in China were withdrawn in 1868, and since that date there have been unmistakable manifestations of increasing insolence on the part of the local officials, which gradually passed into a policy of open violence on the part of the Provincial Governors.

The centralization policy thus failed, as Russia, the nation most intimately acquainted with China from the first, predicted it would fail. But the conclusion to draw from this fact is not that we should abandon this policy altogether, and adopt that advocated by Russia, which may be not inapplicable to the decentralization policy. There is a middle course which may be adopted, that is, to combine the policy recommended by Russia as a means of obtaining security, with that inaugurated by Sir FREDERICK BARON, for maintaining the integrity of China, and preventing the country from falling a prey to Russian encroachment in the north. We can deal with the Central Government without relying upon it. We can appeal to it for redress when refused by the local Mandarins, but must let the Peking authorities know definitely that if they refuse redress, we shall not think of raising any question of a war with China, but shall simply proceed to the spot where the insult has been offered, and exact the redress which has been refused both locally and at the capital. This plan would have the effect of making both Imperial and local authorities anxious to do justice. As matters at present are, the hope of both seems to be that whenever we open upon a negotiation to obtain redress, where it can be made, according to the proverb, to fall to the ground between the two stools of the provincial authorities on the one side, and the Peking authorities on the other. Our only course is to make both responsible—the Peking Government have the opportunity of maintaining its prestige by redressing the wrong; but if it will not do so, to let it know definitely that we are prepared to obtain redress ourselves, by the way, we have obtained ten years ago by Russian Viceroy, and recently again in Doctor TWEED's pamphlet. If foreign nations cannot afford redress, it is clear that foreign nations must obtain it themselves; and if on the other hand the Central Government really can afford redress, but will not grant it, it is certain that they would be more disposed to do so when they discovered that the only result of their refusal was that reputation would be obtained in a way lowering to their influence, and calculated to impair the integrity of the Empire.

Reuter's late Telegram received by the present mail does not contain any information of later date than that in the published Telegrams. It will be noticed by an announcement elsewhere, that the Messageries Maritimes Company have altered the time of the departure of the steamer "Albatross" to the 17th inst. instead of the 16th, as it was originally stated. The steamer "Albatross" is a French Mail, and is bound for Hongkong, and will be a mail from Hongkong weekly on Wednesdays.

The following account of the average amount of bank notes in circulation in Hongkong, published in Saturday's Gazette, is published in the Daily Press, 1870, Oriental Bank Corporation, £257,300; Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China, £183,610; Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, £143,061. Total, £583,971.

LUSITANO THEATRE.
A very pleasing performance was given on Saturday night at this theatre, by the amateurs of the 7th Regiment. "My young wife and my young son" was the first play, and was well received. Mr. W. Barrett, being particularly successful in the part of Gregory Grizol, whose pertness and preference of his theatrical career to the domestic life of a soldier, excited a good deal of merriment. The burlesque of "Othello Traveller" was successful, especially in the scene where the "noted" soldier, Mr. Barrett, is seen in the arms of Othello's wife, the fitting melody of "Yankee Doodle." Mr. Barrett, who managed the house in Hongkong, and Mr. Barrett acted up to the part of Desdemona very successfully, while Mr. Barrett was superb as the Albanian King, and Mr. Barrett as the King's son, a "soldier gentleman," very cleverly. Mr. Barrett's songs in the intervals were amusing, his impersonation of the "Special Buggy" being particularly successful. The house was very good one, notwithstanding the arrival of the mail, and the audience appeared to be thoroughly satisfied with the amusement provided for them.
